Down in the darkest part of Africa Farmer Al and his cat Tarzan were hunting the wildest of wild animals. Tarzan was having very good luck catching African mice, by dancing a Spanish Fandango and playing the tambone to charm them.

The hunters noticed a school of monkeys scratching themselves to music played by their master musician, Paul Blackmonk. They looked so interesting and scientific, that the hunters left them alone. They also notice many interesting things, such as, Harry Hippo's dentist, Joe Monk, who employs seventeen hod carriers to carry concrete for Harry's fillings.

Farmer Al runs into a baby lion and tries to adopt it but the mother comes along and objects. Then a big husky gorilla knocks him for a goal, so Al decides to leave that part of the jungles immediatly.

Later in the day he has an argument with a Hippo, so he takes off his boot and slaps the nasty Hippo down. At 4:30 P.M. that day he has another debate with a bear, this one turns out bad, the farmer wakes up three miles away, and is greatly surprised to see his cat Tarzan coming along with a flock of captured deer and dead bears.

Aesop says:- "It's the way you show up at the sow down that counts."
